

The Investigation Log

The Global Connection:

Target 8.6 specifically states how important it is to increase the portions of youth in jobs to teach responsibility, handling money and how to work in a work environment with more benefits, all these skills aren't taught in school showing the importance of working early to learn the ways or tricks on how to save money, be responsible and listen within the workforce.

Human Impact: A section for the "Lived Experience" narrative.

Many jobs, including McDonalds, Tim Hortons, Subway, Walmart, Dollarama, and gas stations, all have common themes, they don't provide liveable wages.

But these jobs are great for young people who live at home and are youth, typically for people 18 and below. The reason why many of these youth can't get jobs is because our population is increasing rapidly, in return the amount of job slots available are decreasing.

This is mainly because of the sheer amount of people newly coming to Canada from India, Pakistan, China, and Middle Eastern people.

This isn't necessarily bad that new people are coming in, but this is the primary issue as to why youth employment is an issue, and why it is such a RAPIDLY growing issue in Canada. So youth don't have the opportunities to work, as many job slots have been fulfilled.

But this issue isn't just for people in Nova Scotia, it is a rising global issue, not just in Canada. But how is people not getting jobs an issue?

When people globally don't get jobs that are safe and or good working condition jobs, the same people who can't get these jobs (because they aren't available) recognize that they NEED jobs. So they will resort to unsafe, underpaid and bad working conditions. We see this happens almost regularly with factory workers in 3rd world countries. This happens mainly in clothing factories, such as the ones we learned about in Bangladesh. The workers in there know that they are risking their lives working there, but the issue is no other jobs are available to them, and they need a job, so they resort to working in unsafe spaces.

In 20 years, youth employment will look different than it does today because many common part time jobs like cashiers and fast food workers will most likely be predominantly done by AI or self checkout systems. Teens and young adults may have to be more creative and more independent in finding work like online businesses, social media, or helping manage technology. Jobs will be less flexible for teen but there may be way more opportunities that youth can capitalize on from their home devices, computers or phones.
