

Introduction Paragraph

- 3-5 sentences
- Start with a hook, which can be in the form of a question or or just stating an interesting fact on the subject in order to get your reader interested on the topic
- A brief summary of what the reader will be reading about in your essay
- Thesis statement - which is what the purpose of writing this essay is.

Organizational tip - pay attention to the order of your points in the introduction paragraph, and keep this order true for your body paragraphs (see example)

Example

Thesis statement

The Battle of France was a low point for the Allies during the war and there were three key locations which greatly impacted its outcome; The Maginot Line, The Ardennes Forest, and Dunkirk.

Body

Paragraph 1

Option A

The Ardennes Forest

Option B

The Maginot Line

Option C

Dunkirk

Paragraph 2

Dunkirk

The Ardennes Forest

The Maginot Line

Paragraph 3

The Maginot Line

Dunkirk

The Ardennes Forest

Conclusion Paragraph

- Its like your intro paragraph, just shorter and in reverse
- Remind the reader what the point of the essay was
- Touch on the “meat” (or body) of the essay
- Finish with a strong statement that reflects your original introduction “hook”

Time to edit and fix stuff!

What does editing look like?

Punctuation

- periods.
- comas,
- question marks?
- exclamation points!
- quotation marks””

Capitalization

- beginning of a sentence
- name (person, place, brand, title)

Run on sentence

- When 2 complete sentences are NOT connected properly

I love writing short stories I don't have time to write everyday.

Sentence Fragments

- A string of words that does NOT form a complete sentence

Played basketball and then went home.