

Vanilla & Spices

Seth Boutilier

Case Profile

Madagascar which supplies roughly 80% of the world's vanilla, employs over 20,000 children to produce vanilla and other spices like cloves. Ethically sourced vanilla and spices can cost between 20% and 80% more than the standard products.

Ethical Priming

In order to sell a product of equal quality for a higher price, it would greatly be beneficial for the customer to feel like they are taking the ethical high road by choosing the more expensive product. By taking a transparent approach and showing what farms the vanilla/spices are coming from, and who they are supporting, customers will feel more inclined to support them despite the higher price.

FAIRTRADE

Highlighting Fair Trade Advantages

- No child labor: Organizations that produce vanilla and spices in Madagascar for lower prices, use children to reduce their labor costs.
- Living Wages / Fair Payment: The more expensive product is paying workers adequately for their labor, rather than relying on cheap foreign labor.
- The more expensive product's company has more reasonable shifts, and does not force their employees to work without gloves or lung protection for pesticides.

The Pitch

Made by a sweet elderly Madagascan lady, who works short shifts and gets paid well above minimum wage and works in a safe environment. $32.00.

Made by poor African children who get paid unlivable wages for extremely difficult labor. $18.00.
