

Living wage vs Minimum wage

Living wage, what does it mean? No I don't mean how much it takes to get your daily mandatory Starbucks, but how much it takes to really live, survive. Rent, gas, internet, electricity, and water all fall into this category.

And minimum wage? well, its a little...different. Its how much money people get at the absolute bare minimum when working an easy job that took them at most a few hours to get, and it is way way way less than the Living wage mentioned above.

My group chose this issue because we think this is a very big problem, especially in less high tech and comfortablereas, with swaths of people living off of wage that lets them eat cold ramen once a day while barely saving for a car in thier studio apartment. All those areas are overcrowded with these people, they are all suffering because of the living wage that is so high and the minimum wage that is so low, simply because of the Global Goal that is not beng carried out : SDG 1 and SDG 8.

My group consists of Madhavan, Remy, and Brody, you all know us, if you don't, then I'm not telling you.
